Wine of the Week!

J. Portugal Ramos 2015 Reserva Red (Portugal)

This is a rich wine, full of dark fruits and with generous tannins. It has swathes of spice as well as the firm black-plum-skin and blackberry flavors.

The dense texture and the acidity suggest a few more months aging, so drink from early 2018.

Mike's Picks of the Week!

Poggioargentiera 2013 "Bellamarsilia" Morellino di Scansano (Italy)

Made with 85% Sangiovese and 15% Ciliegiolo, this vibrant wine doles out black cherry and ripe raspberry. Hints of white pepper add depth while supple tannins and bright acidity give it an easy-drinking, refreshing quality.

Lafage 2015 "Novellum" Chardonnay (France)

A sensational wine that will compete with wines five times the price, the 2015 Novellum Chardonnay is the real deal and actually reminded me of a Chardonnay from Mark Aubert in California's Sonoma County. White peach, crushed rocks, spice and brioche notes all emerge from this medium to full-bodied Chardonnay that has depth, layered texture and length. Buy it.

Kono 2016 Sauvignon Blanc (New Zealand)

A sizable 70,000 cases of this bargain were imported, so it should be reasonably available. The citrus fruit does have a greenish tinge to it, boasting hints of passion fruit, snap pea and green onion, but they're within the bounds of regional typicity, and bring a crisp, tart edge to the finish. Drink now.

Glenelly 2014 "Glass Collection" Cabernet Sauvignon (South Africa)

Direct, with a good jolt of cherry preserves and cassis, backed by light-handed, vanilla-accented toast. Drink now through 2018.

Fabrice Larochette 2014 "Le Clos de Monsieur Noly" Pouilly-Fuisse (France)

This is produced from 40-year-old vines that are planted in a walled vineyard. It is a beautifully concentrated combination of pure ripe yellow fruits and intense acidity. Together they create an opulent wine that still has structure and a crisp aftertaste. Keep this wine for a few more months and drink from the end of 2017.
